

From: Owie Jaggi
To: Microsoft ATR
Date: 1/6/02 11:19am
Subject: microsoft

If microsoft is charged then so should AOL

I believe microsoft has been unduly charged. I have tried to use aol programs while subscribed to microsoft; they either would not work or they screwed up my MS programs. I believe this was intentional on the part of aol. On the other hand MS has given away more free software programs to the public than any other provider; especially aol. People who have a little knowledge of cp,s choose MS because they know it is a much better product with better service; while aol has a clientel of mostly people who have very little or no knowledge of computers. But then it pays to advertise (which aol does a lot of) which MS does little of ;like on public tv. When aol users gain a little knowledge about CP,s they usually switch to MICROSOFT. I for one wished there was some way to keep aol products completely off of my CP; but for some reason aol seems to show up in my software every now and then and I have to delete it.

---

Join the world's largest e-mail service with MSN Hotmail. Click Here

MTC-00009029_0002